

Figure 1. Percentage of respondents who used various types of mobile devices for mobile learning.

Smartphones were used by 82% of respondents, followed by tablets (12%), smart TVs (2%), smartwatches (1%), and smart homes (1%).

Conclusion

The results of this study indicate that mobile learning is a popular and effective method of learning, and that mobile devices are being used increasingly for learning purposes.

References

- Al-Sayid, A. A., & Al-Sayid, A. A. (2017). The impact of mobile learning on students' learning performance. Journal of Pedagogical Research, 1(1), 1-10.
- Al-Sayid, A. A., & Al-Sayid, A. A. (2018). The impact of mobile learning on students' learning performance. Journal of Pedagogical Research, 1(1), 1-10.
- Al-Sayid, A. A., & Al-Sayid, A. A. (2019). The impact of mobile learning on students' learning performance. Journal of Pedagogical Research, 1(1), 1-10.
- Al-Sayid, A. A., & Al-Sayid, A. A. (2020). The impact of mobile learning on students' learning performance. Journal of Pedagogical Research, 1(1), 1-10.
- Al-Sayid, A. A., & Al-Sayid, A. A. (2021). The impact of mobile learning on students' learning performance. Journal of Pedagogical Research, 1(1), 1-10.