Abstract The purpose of this study was to explore the experiences of older adults with dementia and their family caregivers in the use of a community-based, dementia care program. The study was conducted in a large, urban, multiethnic community center. The study used a phenomenological approach to explore the experiences of older adults with dementia and their family caregivers. The study found that older adults with dementia and their family caregivers experienced a range of challenges in the use of the community-based, dementia care program. The challenges included limited knowledge of the program, limited access to the program, and limited support from family and friends. The study also found that older adults with dementia and their family caregivers experienced a range of benefits from the program, including increased social support, increased knowledge of dementia, and increased access to resources. The study has implications for the development of community-based, dementia care programs that are accessible and supportive for older adults with dementia and their family caregivers.

Keywords: dementia, older adults, family caregivers, community-based care, phenomenology
