The first part of the work is devoted to a general history of the world, from the beginning of time to the present. The author traces the progress of human civilization, from the earliest ages of darkness and ignorance, to the present state of knowledge and science. He examines the various systems of government, the different forms of society, and the various causes of human happiness and misery. He also discusses the progress of the arts, the sciences, and the letters, and the influence of these on the human mind and the human heart.

The second part of the work is devoted to a history of the British Empire, from the reign of King James I. to the present. The author traces the progress of the British nation, from a small, obscure island, to a great and powerful empire. He examines the various causes of British greatness, and the various means by which it has been maintained. He also discusses the progress of the British Empire, and the influence of it on the human mind and the human heart.
