

© Springer 2011
DOI 10.1007/s10551-011-0911-1
Journal of Business Ethics, Vol. 100, No. 1, pp. 1–12
© Springer 2011

Business Ethics and the Business Case: A Response to the Call for a Business Case for Business Ethics

John R. Boatright

Abstract. This article responds to the call for a business case for business ethics. It argues that the business case for business ethics is not a necessary condition for the legitimacy of business ethics. Business ethics is a normative discipline that is grounded in moral theory and is not dependent on the business case for its legitimacy.

Keywords: business ethics, business case

Business ethics is a normative discipline that is grounded in moral theory and is not dependent on the business case for its legitimacy. Business ethics is a normative discipline that is grounded in moral theory and is not dependent on the business case for its legitimacy.

Business ethics is a normative discipline that is grounded in moral theory and is not dependent on the business case for its legitimacy. Business ethics is a normative discipline that is grounded in moral theory and is not dependent on the business case for its legitimacy.

Business ethics is a normative discipline that is grounded in moral theory and is not dependent on the business case for its legitimacy. Business ethics is a normative discipline that is grounded in moral theory and is not dependent on the business case for its legitimacy.

Business ethics is a normative discipline that is grounded in moral theory and is not dependent on the business case for its legitimacy. Business ethics is a normative discipline that is grounded in moral theory and is not dependent on the business case for its legitimacy.

Business ethics is a normative discipline that is grounded in moral theory and is not dependent on the business case for its legitimacy. Business ethics is a normative discipline that is grounded in moral theory and is not dependent on the business case for its legitimacy.

Business ethics is a normative discipline that is grounded in moral theory and is not dependent on the business case for its legitimacy. Business ethics is a normative discipline that is grounded in moral theory and is not dependent on the business case for its legitimacy.

Business ethics is a normative discipline that is grounded in moral theory and is not dependent on the business case for its legitimacy. Business ethics is a normative discipline that is grounded in moral theory and is not dependent on the business case for its legitimacy.

Business ethics is a normative discipline that is grounded in moral theory and is not dependent on the business case for its legitimacy. Business ethics is a normative discipline that is grounded in moral theory and is not dependent on the business case for its legitimacy.

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]